The other variation I love is when we are discussing, say, some piece of legislation that affects the people of this state. The way a governor is discussing the issue with some of his or her senatorial friends is different than when a governor is speaking to the public, publicly, in a news conference. A governor can have a more intimate, personal discussion in one of these talks than when that governor is discussing the issue in a news conference. It's also interesting to watch how a governor handles someone who is arguing with him or her on one of these topics. We also watch governors. I was thinking of, oh my gosh, how did I learn so much about West Virginia Governor Earl Ray Tomblin while I was in that body? Not only did I learn about West Virginia and Governor Tomblin, but I learned a whole lot about the political process in general. For one thing, the best way to learn about a topic you are not well-versed in is to listen to how a professional expert speaks about that topic. West Virginia was a rural state and Earl Ray Tomblin is a farmer. So I found out how a governor operates by watching what a governor's press secretary does when a reporter from a local television station asks a question about something going on in West Virginia. When the governor has a press conference in one of the rural regions of West Virginia, the governor's press secretary will usually be with the governor or a local congressman who has spoken with the governor in the capital. In those situations, it's the press secretary who usually handles the microphone. I was able to observe from that. When the governor has a big policy or major legislation issue that affects West Virginia, I've also observed the governor's press secretary. I've been watching what the press secretary of the governor has to say about the issue. If the governor's press secretary is very effective, he or she is able to explain the issue in a way that pleases the governor and gets a thoughtful answer from the governor. If the press secretary is less effective, I will watch to see whether the governor has responded to the opposition and will make

I have tried a few in the last couple of days and some are not working at all others just don't work for AVG, etc, or just don't show on the PC at all.. I only keep the ones that work.. One other thing that I want to note is that, for some reason, I can't download some videos because they don't even show up on the list of videos to download. Maybe it has something to do with the fact that I'm using WMP and I have MJPEG selected as the codec for my videos.

A: Some of the better AVs have a VirtualBox / Host Add-on available. Often you can use WMP instead (since WMP 9 is integrated into Windows), but sometimes there's a bridge between WMP and the AV -- it happened to me when I switched to JDownloader. If a browser can't play a video, it's sometimes possible to "Save As" to view/save/copy. Some AVs have options to "Not Save" (or not ask). Edit: It's confusing for me since the question has changed. If you can download the video and open it with another app (i.e. other video viewer app, or video player app), then... that tells you that your AV isn't detecting it. Your AV is doing what it's supposed to do -- which is keeping you from opening the "infected" content. In some cases, it's possible for AVs to exist, without any additional restrictions. They don't catch what their name says. I.E. They don't do "Anti Virus" -- they just move your stuff to a quarantine partition, or something. Your AV is catching other pieces of malware/infection. There's no way around that. If you try to go without, you're only hurting yourself (and possibly your PC).

Q: list comprehension inside a for loop returns None in Python I tried to write a code to find out intersections of sub-lists inside a list of lists. The code works, but it returns None in the last loop. I am not sure if I am doing something wrong or if it is just a Python's peculiarities. Here is the code: `N = int(input("Number of arrays: "))` `i = 0` while `i`
