However, you can always start using a new waveform by selecting it from the main window. There is a good selection of sounds available from the main window, including loops, arpeggios, scales, arps, effects, leads, pads, basses, pianos and leads, so you can have your pick. The delay modulation options are pretty good, with the maximum being eight milliseconds, while the selected delay time and the LFO modulation rate are locked to each other. The quality of the samples is very good, but as a downside, they can only be opened and modified within iZotope Iris. Apart from that, you can create new presets that do not need to be opened using the 'New' option, which lets you choose a preset from the presets library or import a WAV file. Some extras you can take advantage of with iZotope Iris are the following: an eraser, magic wand, brush selection and lasso, as well as zoom in and out of the waveform.
